

Getting enough money to survive

A one day seminar on identifying and securing funds for services for children and young people.

This practical seminar will help you to understand:

- The current challenging funding environment;
- What commissioners are looking for;
- Where the money is;
- How to position your services so that you are likely to win support and secure funding.

This seminar is supported by a short booklet which reviews and analyses all funding streams available to 0-19 services up to 2013.

Who this is aimed at:

Participants from:

- Services currently in local authorities who are likely to face competitive tendering for their services in a contestable marketplace in the future;
- Anyone who is thinking of moving their service out of the local authority.

This seminar may also be beneficial to those working in voluntary organisations.

This one day action-focused course will equip you with:

- An essential scan of the environment and Government policy relating to the funding of public services for young people.
- What does the market for children and young people's services look like?
- Where is the money: a practical approach to identifying sources of money and how you might access them, including: education funding and the Pupil Premium; Early Intervention grant; Local Wellbeing Boards, etc.
- Positioning and aligning your organisation and services in order to maximise your chances of drawing down funding, including how to conduct competitor analysis.

Who is running the workshop:

FPM is a leading provider of tailored workforce development programmes to enable organisations to deliver better public services.

We have designed and delivered innovative programmes to nearly 20,000 staff drawn from 1,900 voluntary organisations, all 152 local authorities in England and a majority of local authorities in Wales over the past 10 years.
